Pictures Emerge in Assassinations

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Millions of Americans were asked for help today in identifying blurred photographs and sketches of mystery men connected to the murders of John F. Kennedy and Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

The Assassinations Committee yesterday made public two composite drawings and three blurred photographs "to make best possible use of available pictorial evidence and photographic techniques . . . in the hope that citizen recognition of them might shed additional light on the assassinations of . . . [illegible]dy and King."

Anyone recognizing any of [illegible]n depicted were asked to conta[illegible] the House Select Committee on Assassinations, Washington, D.C. 20515, and submit any pictures they may have of the subjects.

Proven linkage of any of the men to the Kennedy and King cases case would directly challenge the still unrefuted conclusion by the Warren Commission that Lee Harvey Oswald acted alone in killing Kennedy in Dallas Nov. 22, 1963, and the guilty plea by escaped convict James Earl Ray that he murdered King in Memphis, April 4, 1968.

A series of public hearings is scheduled on both cases in August, September, November and December, when all "new" evidence will be reviewed and many witnesses, including Ray, will be recalled for testimony.

The three photographs released by the committee yesterday included a blurred image of a dark haired man, possibly with a mustache, ~~sitting on a curb~~ with a group whose faces do not show. The committee caption said only that the picture was taken in Dealey Plaza ~~"moments after President Kennedy was shot."~~

The other two photographs, according to the committee, are "of two men who may have been in Mexico City in the fall of 1963 when Lee Harvey Oswald . . . was there."

One photograph shows a handsome, apparently blond-haired man in his 20s or early 30s. He appears to be wearing a jacket over a dark turtleneck sweater or pullover.

The other photograph, badly scratched and blurred, is a side shot of a light or gray haired, square nosed man who could be in his late 40s or 50s. He wears a light suit, shirt and tie. The face of a man leaning beside his left side is obscured.

A sketch, captioned "Ralph," shows a middle-aged, dark haired, square jawed man with high cheekbones "who allegedly was in Atlanta in 1967 or 1968."

The other composite drawing, captioned "Maurice Bishop," shows a man with close-cropped hair bearing a resemblance to Prince Philip, husband of Queen Elizabeth of England.

The committee said the man "reportedly represented himself as a member of the U.S. intelligence community in the 1960s and . . . on occasion used the name Maurice Bishop."

4 State Penitentiary Inmates Testify to Horrors Behind Walls

WHILE KING and Ms. Motsinger elaborated on the many areas where health care in Tennessee prisons does not meet accepted standards, Tennessee state prison inmate George Whittier told the same story from a personal viewpoint.

Whittier — serving a life sentence as an habitual criminal — told how prison hospital employees left him with an open, 1-inch wound in his chest following surgery for removal of a cyst. "The stitches busted open and I went back to the hospital and they told me they couldn't do nothing for me," Whittier testified, adding that he could see bone beneath the wound.

He said a doctor treated him by putting a bandage over the incision and instructing him to "leave it alone."

time in the showers, he said there were no guards around to enforce that rule — or to prevent the rape.

Asked by plaintiffs' attorney Russ Overby how often guards patrol the check-in, Whittier replied:

"Approximately every hour or hour-and-a-half — sometimes longer than that."

EARL HICKS JR., who is serving a 20-year sentence at the main prison for armed robbery, testified there were no guards around when he was stabbed three times one afternoon last January.

"Approximately 15 minutes elapsed between the first stabbing and the last," said Hicks, who testified that he was in the office he uses as a counselor in monitored adequately enough as a result of staff shortages," King said. "They are subject to a very great degree of danger in terms of complications not being noted.

"NURSES ARE being told to function as if they had the diagnostic skills of a physician," he said.

"I make recommendations that there be staff increases only reluctantly because I know it costs money," said King, who was appointed by an Oklahoma judge to monitor that state's improvement of its prison health care system.

"But I think some increases are necessary to protect life."

MS. MOTSINGER told of being asked one day by a licensed practical nurse to check on patient hospital beds were sometimes used for healthy inmates.

Ms. Motsinger complained of the lack of guidance the hospital provided its employees.

"I DIDN'T know where to go to get what I needed and who to go to when I didn't get what I needed," she said.

For shifts when she was the only nurse on duty, "I had no book to look at to tell me who to call, what to do, where to go. I asked and I didn't get it."

During cross-examination, however, Ms. Motsinger admitted she has not seen the hospital's staffing patterns or procedures since her resignation in 1980 — a step she took because she felt the prison was making no progress in its goal of upgrading health care.
